troops at the beginning of the second week of that June which saw the war of week of that June which saw the war of the Revolution fairly begun. The events Builders' Iron Work of this and the next two weeks run over the minor actions and skirmishes incident to the situation of the "Army" and the closing in of the British "Expeditions were organized," to "keep up the enthusiasm of the men." Going back a few days, on the 27th of May, the "Engagement" of Noddle's Island took place, Pol and the affair of Chelsea Neck, and the first important naval capture—that of the Works Corner Water and Lagrange Sts., schooner which fired on the Provincials, and which some of Putnam's men captured from the Neck-with her armament of "four six-pounders, 12 swivels, and some small arms." Here, also, the usual contradiction as to losses is shown, Gen. Gage reporting the British loss at "two men killed," and "a few wounded;" while the New Hampshire Gazette, of June 2, 1775, records the loss thus,

'Tis said between 200 and 300 [a safe way of putting it Marines and Regulars were killed and wounded, and that a place was dug in Boston 25 feet square to bury their dead.

Of these events prior to the engagement of the 17th, these lines from Trumbull, in McFingal:

"Nay, stern with rage grim Putnam bolding, Plundered both Hogg and Noddle Island, Scared troops of Tories into town, Burned all their hay and houses down.

"And menseed Gage unless he'd fice To drive him headlong to the sea; As once, to faithiese Jews a sign, The De'el turned hog reeve, did the swins."

It has been asserted that the records of the wars do not offer such thrilling experiences and of intenser interest, viewed in the light of subsequent events than those of the 24 hours beginning at 6 o'clock of June 16, 1775. The commito'clock of June 16, 1775. The committee of Safety of Cambridge had decided that the safety of the Provincials demanded the defense of Charlestown Neck, of which, Bunker Hill, was plainly the key. At the hour named 900 de ly the key. At the hour named, 900 de. vont men assembled on the Common at 10 Imp Cambridge, armed with intrenching for city property. tools. They were led in prayer to the God of battles by President Langdon, of Harvard College. At 9 o'clock the column moved away from town toward the Neck, led by two sergeants with dark After farm in Barry County, Michigan Some wore militia coats, and the some Sunday suits of homespun cloth, yet it was all one in the double darkness and at twelve o'clock the column had reached and begun work on the Hill, and at break of day the marine sentries of the ships in the river discovered the hill fortified and gave the alarm.

Remember, gentlemen, we have no recource to any resources if we lose Boston, but to go on board ourships, which will be very disagreeable to us all."

There was now a general discharge from Howe's field pieces, from the Copp's Hill batteries, and those on the forward in two divisions-the right comed to move along the Mystic, in order to penetrate the American line stationed at the rail fence, and cut off retreat from the redoubt; the left under General articles and the most reasonable terms in the In confectionary goods, dry fruits, &c., no least to storm the breastwork and recan afford a finer assortment. Down fell the first rank, swept by the terrible discharge; the next advanced, and that too strewed the ground; and as the enemy staggered forward over the dead and dying, they were met with the same deliberate aim. Gen. Pigot ordered a retreat, and a shout of triumph burst forth from the redoubt. It was answered from the rail fence.

The enemy's artillery, stuck fast in the clay pits and furnished with balls too large for the pieces, had been left behind and the troops had advanced, firing with precision, and doing no damage to the Americans, but only to the branches of trees above them. As they came within the prescribed distance, the word was given, and quickly the marksmen behind 125-Summit Street, Tolede---125 thinning the ranks with their cool, dethe fence began taking deadly aim and p liberate fire, shouting to one another, "There! see that officer! Let us have a shot at him!" They used the fence as a o rest; the British could not get over that strange rustic breastwork of green grass packed between fence railr. They began to lose terribly, and the order was given to retreat. The Americans set up a shout, some of them leaping over the barricade, and eagerly attacking the foe even before they retreated. In the retreat the flying enemy left behind the dead and dying, and some even ran to the boats for security.

The attack had been made and re-

KERHILL

General Clinton, who mw the discomfiture of the British forces from Copp's Hill, crossed the river and took command of some five or six hundred men who stood hesitating, without orders, on the beach. His presence and his re-inforcement were most timely; if he had GENTS' SILK HATS not come up, "we should have been forced to retire;" says the British report on the conduct of the war. General Howe now left his place at the head of the left column and massed his men on the right, making at the same time a demonstratioe at the rail fence, chiefly to cover the movement of the artillery, which was placed so as to take advantage PRICE LIST, $3.00, $4.00, $5.00, $6.00 of the gap between the breastwork and These Hats cannot be bought by the dozen any fence, where it could rake the interior set by you can save two profits by getting them rectly from the Factory.
